Ways healthcare workers & patients can reduce social isolation during the pandemic

With stay at home orders and social distancing mandates, many people have felt the strain of social isolation. The following strategies can help clinicians and patients feel more connected. Read more click here.

Available Training

Thu, March 11, 2021
2:00 PM – 5:00 PM EST

Participants will learn about a Robert Wood Johnson Foundation-funded project designed to create a Global Learning for Health Equity Framework. “Global learning” is the practice of adopting global ideas to apply them to local challenges. The development of the Framework will articulate the value of global options as solutions for pressing health equity issues; identify the essential elements required to adapt interventions to different US communities; identify and address the concerns of decision makers and other stakeholders; and overcome barriers to dissemination and implementation of health equity interventions.
